Baltimore, MD – October 21, 2008 – Fan Cans, LLC recently marked the sale of its patented, specialty recycling containers to the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim. Fan Cans delivered recycling containers with lids shaped like baseball batter helmets and customized with the team's colors and logo to Angel Stadium for the postseason. Fan Cans complement the green initiatives of facilities and teams nationwide, as the inventive product catches fans' attention and encourages earth-friendly disposal of recyclables such as bottles and cans.

"Our organization has worked diligently this season with the Team Greening Program initiated by Major League Baseball," said Angels Club President Dennis Kuhl. "The quality and design of the Fan Cans product served as a constant reminder to our fans of the responsibility we all have in the area of recycling and environmental protection. We stationed Fan Cans throughout the ballpark and received numerous positive comments from our fans regarding their presence and our efforts."

The Fan Cans product line features both recycling and waste containers with lids shaped like baseball batter, football player and motor sports driver helmets. The baseball batter helmet design started production this summer, and Fan Cans will launch its football and motor sports helmet designs early next year.

"Fan Cans are a win-win solution for facility and sponsor executives looking to engage with sports fans," explains Stephen Wolford, president and CEO of Fan Cans, LLC. "People at sporting events are drawn to the uniqueness of our recycling containers, which can be produced in any colors and branded with any team and corporate sponsor logos. Once we have the fans' attention, we're promoting not only brand awareness, but greener, cleaner facilities, too."

Wolford concludes, "Fan Cans are unlike any other recycling or waste containers you'll see in stadiums, motor speedways, schools, parks, or other commercial locations. They're affordable and more durable than off-the-shelf containers, plus they're colorful, fun, and provide catchy billboard space. Fans love them, and more importantly – they stop and use them."
